

Lecture by

Professor Vivienne Nathanson

Director of Professional Activities
(BMA)

'Personal Health: Whose rights matter most?'

There are frequent and complex tensions between the rights of individuals and of society, and between different societies. In public health these ethical tensions are increasing and will have profound consequences on the future practice

Date: Thursday 19th January 2012

Timings: 2-4pm

Location: D004 Ebsworth Building
Durham University
Queen's Campus
Stockton-on-Tees
TS17 6BH

Dr Vivienne Nathanson is the Director of Professional Activities at the BMA, responsible for overseeing the Association's work on public health, medical ethics and international affairs. She is a teacher at Durham and Cambridge University and continues to educate in fora around the world. Her past roles include: General Medicine Trainee, Professor of Medical Management and Professor of Public Health Ethics. Dr Nathanson has a particular interest in public health, ethics, weapons control and human rights.

Please let Karen Waller know if you are going to attend this event-email: karen.waller@durham.ac.uk
or telephone 0191 3340328 if you have any queries